would not stop in perpetuity at Tung-chow. The last brief section of the journey to the metropolis would prove so difficult, uncomfortable, and irksome compared to the ease, luxury, and rapidity of the cars that even mandarin prejudice would thaw, and the solemn edicts of the Prohibited City would eventually be awakened by the shrill scream of the iron horse. The great thing is to get the end of the railway wedge firmly inserted. It was fondly hoped, when the pioneer line between Woung and Shanghai had been successfully opened, that the wedge had found its way in at last, but years have rolled by, since, in a fit of folly as insensate as it was childish, the Chinese Authorities tore up this line, and showed their determination once and for all to allow no foreigner to acquire property on Chinese soil outside the limits of the settlements. The spirit that prevails among the mandarins at the present moment varies from that which induced them in former times to so heartily approve the introduction of any project having even only a foreign origin. The same prejudice and distrust still exist in the minds of the Chinese mandarins, but they have grown somewhat wiser, and do not allow these feelings to so completely blind them to the promotion of their own interests. Thus it happens that in these later years we see the two greatest Viceroy in the Empire reporting in favour of the introduction of railways, and last of all we find a Censor—one of an anti-foreign and highly conservative class—urging the Government to commence work on the same. It is of less importance who makes the railway so long as it is made. An inexhaustible supply of good and cheap labour is at hand, coal can be obtained at small cost and in great quantity from the Keping and other mines, iron will not long be wanting, and there should be no obstacle to the rapid spread of the railway in those portions of the Celestial Empire where facilities for water carriage are scanty and insufficient. In Chihli and Shantung the economic value of railway as a means of communication to open up markets and connect the interior with the ports would be especially felt. Power, famine, greater prosperity, less brigandage, and better government would prove a few among the blessings which might be expected to attend the introduction of the railway.

The Agents (Messrs. Siemens & Co.) inform us that the D. R. Steamer Electra, from Hamburg, left Singapore for this yesterday. The French corvette Kervin, Captain de Beaumont, left here yesterday morning for Saigon. The French gunboat Lucie, Captain Rouvier, arrived here yesterday from Nagasaki.

We are requested by the Postmaster-General to state that information has been received from Fookshing that, during the past year, three bags were sent from Hongkong.

We regret to note that most disastrous floods have occurred in Japan. The Chogyo Shin-bu says that four hundred and thirty-five villages in Kumanoto have been more or less submerged by floods, and ten thousand families reduced to a hopeless condition. The crops of rice in the area of ten thousand nine hundred and sixty square chi have been entirely destroyed.

Under date of Portland, Oregon, May 29th, the following appeared in the San Francisco Morning Call:—Capt. Thomson, of the British steamer Bothwell Castle, was fired by Judge Deady in the United States Circuit Court, this morning, $10,000 for violating section 423 in carrying 100 more passengers than allowed by American regulations, $500 or one passenger. A stay of execution was granted for sixty days, to permit him to apply to the President for a pardon.

The steamer Ly Tai, which left this port on Sunday for Shanghai, was towed back yesterday afternoon and taken round to Aberdeen Dock. She was bought at auction a short time ago, and is being sold at a loss, and being sent up to Shanghai to be used, we hear, as a hulk. After she had proceeded some distance on her voyage she was found to be making water in the engine room, and immediately returned to the wharf with the information. The steamer Ly Tai was sent out to her assistance, and she was towed back. The Ly Tai formerly belonged to the French Navy, and was used as a gunboat.

he said the blame lay with a fellow gun labourer named Moon Shing. He was to have married the girl Leehoi, and should have done so but for Moon Shing, who had caused things to turn out as they had done, and who was now in the hands of the law. The defendant then turned round and looked down into the road addressed the large gathering of people there to some effect. After that he turned round and addressed to him the stick which he held in his right or left hand, but it was held in a threatening position. He struck him with the stick and after a few moments' time with his hand. The defendant had no key in his hand, and he did not use them. He had no knife or hard substance in his hand either, and he did not strike him with his open hand. Complainant did not notice immediately after this affair that the defendant had a cut on the head. Examined by Mr. Francis Zuberli, he struggled and fought and fell against the window. By his Worship—Complainant could not say whether the people who were in the passage were of the same persuasion as the defendant or not. Only members of the Catholic Church were allowed to use the passage, in which the defendant was not a member, and the church was not a member of the Catholic Church. The defendant was going by the passage to the church, which he would enter from there by the sacristy. The use of this passage in this way was prohibited generally, but it was used by some persons. Some of the Portuguese from want of good breeding also passed through. This was not good. That would be good, my I suppose, would it not? Complainant said that sometimes they smoked as they passed through. The reason complainant wanted the defendant to take off his hat was to show respect to the house which was a seminary of clergy. The defendant being a layman, he was not allowed to enter the church, and he was not allowed to enter the church. Complainant said that sometimes they smoked as they passed through. The reason complainant wanted the defendant to take off his hat was to show respect to the house which was a seminary of clergy. The defendant being a layman, he was not allowed to enter the church, and he was not allowed to enter the church. The defendant was going by the passage to the church, which he would enter from there by the sacristy. The use of this passage in this way was prohibited generally, but it was used by some persons. Some of the Portuguese from want of good breeding also passed through. This was not good. That would be good, my I suppose, would it not?
